Celebrating 100 Years of Music

What a year we had in 2020-21!

Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, we produced five operas and two ballets that provided valuable experience for our talented students, and now we are thrilled to be able to invite you to a full season of IU Jacobs School of Music productions during our Conrad Prebys Centennial Performance Season—celebrating the school’s one-hundredth anniversary!

And what better way to kick off than with a new production of Mozart’s beloved The Magic Flute? Join Tamino and Papageno as they set out to rescue Pamina, daughter of the infamous Queen of the Night.

Then dance with us into Fall Ballet: A Leap Forward—highlighted by Chaconne, an original work by our own Sasha Janes—before we present Monteverdi’s last opera, The Coronation of Poppea, in Auer Hall for one weekend only.

Don’t miss the hilarious Falstaff, iconic The Nutcracker, and eclectic Holiday Celebration, featuring musicians from across the Jacobs School, as 2021 comes to a close.

Spring begins with an evening of William Grant Still. His opera Highway 1, USA is partnered with a new ballet, 19, choreographed by Sasha Janes to Still’s music. Each will be a first for Jacobs.

Puccini’s beautiful La Rondine followed by the historical Spring Ballet: A Look Back and the ever-popular H.M.S. Pinafore by Gilbert and Sullivan complete the opera and ballet season.

Be sure to join us for our other spring offerings as well. Jacobs Live at the Movies will finally premiere, featuring a live orchestra accompanying some classic Hollywood entertainment, and the Singing Hoosiers will perform their Spring Concert, while the Jazz Celebration will surely satisfy with an evening of jazzy favorites.

And to top it all off, we have brand new seats in the Musical Arts Center! So please let us help you take a load off—in more ways than one.

We hope you’ll celebrate our centennial season with us as we return to presenting all the incredible musical talent in the Jacobs School of Music live and in person. We can’t wait to welcome you back!

The Magic Flute premiered on September 30, 1791, at a Viennese suburban theater, Theater auf der Wieden, with a libretto by Emanuel Schikaneder and music by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. The theater was built in 1787 and was used for opera performances until 1801. As a librettist, a comic actor, and the theater’s impresario, Schikaneder wrote librettos and created original roles on stage for several German singspiels (“plays with music”) premiered at Theater auf der Wieden. Adapted from Lulu, oder die Zauberflöte (“Lulu, or the Magic Flute”) from Christoph Martin Wieland’s fairy-tale collection Dschinnistan, Schikaneder and Mozart’s The Magic Flute belonged to Theater auf der Wieden’s fairy-tale-singspiel tradition, which usually featured a fairy-tale world with non-human characters, objects with magical powers, and a quest completed by a noble hero and his travel companion.

There are traditionally two pairs of main characters in late-eighteenth-century operas, a serious noble couple and a comic peasant couple. In The Magic Flute, Tamino and Pamina are the noble couple; Papageno and Papagena are the comic peasants. Tamino’s and Pamina’s arias are about absent lovers and unrequited love. Early in Act I, in his aria “Dies Bildnis ist bezaubernd schön,” Tamino sings of his affection for Pamina when looking at her portrait. Late in Act II, in her aria “Ach, ich fühlt’s,” Pamina expresses grief, believing that Tamino has abandoned her. Juxtaposed with Tamino and Pamina’s profound love story, the one between Papageno and Papagena is comical, with Papagena first appearing in disguise as an old lady. In their short duet “Pa, pa, pa” in the Act II finale, Mozart set the music with patter declamation to provide comical effects suitable for the couple.

Schikaneder often created magical objects in his fairy-tale librettos. In The Magic Flute, they are the flute and the glockenspiel. When Tamino and Papageno play these magical instruments, the music is part of the story, heard not only by audience members in the theater, but also by characters on stage. Schikaneder also wrote non-human characters for his fairy-tale worlds, usually consisting of an animal role, genies, and opposing personages with godly or magical powers.

A Papagei (German for “parrot”) who does not stop chattering, Papageno is both a bird-catcher and bird like, making him the “animal character” of The Magic Flute. This is a type often associated with the travel companion in Schikaneder’s fairy-tale quests. Papageno’s association with animals heightens the differences in social status and character between him and Tamino. Throughout The Magic Flute, the two display contrasting wishes and desires. Tamino longs for love and seeks truth from the Initiates, whereas Papageno only wants food, drink, and a wife. Tamino’s high-minded wishes and Papageno’s corporeal desires reflect their respective roles and status. Unlike Tamino, a prince, Papageno has to work as a bird-catcher for the Queen in exchange for sustenance. As a peasant for whom starvation and thirst can be of considerable concern, Papageno’s proletarian identity becomes a reason for his desires during his quest with Tamino.

Mozart wrote distinct musical styles for the genies and godly characters in The Magic Flute. The three boys are the genies in this opera. When they appear in the Act I finale, Act II trio, and Act II finale, their simple and tuneful melodies feature dotted rhythms in moderate tempi and are accompanied by combinations of flutes, clarinets, and bassoons, a type of instrumentation for the genies also seen in other fairy-tale singspiels such as Der Stein der Weisen. The godly characters with ruling powers in The Magic Flute are the Queen of the Night and Sarastro, the leader of the Initiates and priest to the gods Osiris and Isis. For Sarastro, Mozart wrote music that sounds devotional. Sarastro’s aria with chorus at the beginning of Act II depicts a religious ceremony. In this scene, Mozart included trombones in the orchestration, instruments typically used in late-eighteenth-century operas for otherworldly beings, to signify the presence of the gods Osiris and Isis. Mozart set Sarastro’s other aria, “In diesen heiligen Hallen,” as a strophic hymn, assigning the same music to two stanzas of text, in slow tempo and with simple phrase structures.

The Queen of the Night’s arias are about her divine status as the sovereign of her realm. During the Queen’s recitative and aria in Act I, no other character on stage speaks or sings. Her singular vocal presence shows her dominion. Her famous aria in Act II, “Der Hölle Rache kocht in meinem Herzen,” is an expression of her fury. In both arias, Mozart wrote long coloratura flourishes in the highest range of the soprano voice to display the extremes of vocal timbre and highlight the Queen’s ruling power as a female sovereign.

Monostatos’s music is in the stilo alla turca, a style meant to evoke Janissary band music, the music of the Turkish military and state ceremonies. Catered to the audience’s fondness for the “exotic” but with little connection to the actual Ottoman Empire, “Turkish” characters were portrayed in a distorted fashion as violent and sexually driven. Yet they were also comic roles. Mozart combined drums, piccolos, and cymbals with simple harmonies, rhythms, and textures for the stilo alla turca. The deliberately loud, simplified, and even absurd sounds of “Turkish” music made the Ottomans appear less threatening to an Austrian audience, who feared the military threat of the Ottoman Empire.

In The Magic Flute, representations of social classes, genders, and ethnicities were products of eighteenth-century views distant from twenty-first-century values. The characters and music display conventional traits of late-eighteenth-century operas and Theater auf der Wieden’s fairy-tale singspiels. However, these conventionalities did not undermine the spectacle of The Magic Flute, but rather demonstrated Mozart’s subtle and extraordinary command of musical styles for character portrayals.

One of history’s most morally ambiguous operas, The Coronation of Poppea brims with contradiction. Together, librettist Giovanni Francesco Busenello and composer Claudio Monteverdi blur the boundaries between good and evil. In Poppea, desire clouds rational judgment. As a result, audiences may find themselves struggling with the dichotomy between the opera’s moral lessons and its music’s beauty. We recognize the protagonists’ actions as reprehensible yet are intoxicated by their music. Despite ourselves, we desire to see their love fulfilled and cannot help but feel satisfied by Nero and Poppea’s ultimate union, though we are also disconcerted by the devastation it has left in its wake.

The Coronation of Poppea was written for the 1643 Venetian opera season. Monteverdi uses the combination of noble, speech-like recitative and lyrical, song-like aria to shape the personalities of the characters and to reveal intentions hidden behind the text. The dialogue between the opera’s main characters, Poppea and Nero, is almost exclusively in song, rather than recitative. The combination of lyricism, pacing, and chromaticism charges their musical themes with a sense of eroticism that emphasizes the lovers’, especially Poppea’s, sensuality. Thus, the audience is as entranced by song as Nero is by Poppea.

We can contrast Poppea’s music with that of her rival, Nero’s wife, Octavia. Abandoned by love, she is one of the most complex characters in the opera. Her conflicting emotions and motivations express themselves almost exclusively in turbulent recitative. Unlike her historical counterpart, in the opera, she is both victim and villain. Recitative’s declamatory style best expresses her reaction to events outside her control. After being discarded by Nero, Octavia laments being a scorned queen and makes a shockingly blunt feminist statement against men’s tyranny. Later, she will plot to murder Poppea. Significantly, one of the few moments in which she sings lyrically occurs in the second stanza of “Disprezzata Regina.” While singing about Poppea, she embodies her rival’s intoxicating sensuality before returning to alternating states of despair and rage. Octavia is the dramatic opposite to the proactive and seductive Poppea, and so it follows that she is also the lyrical enchantress’s musical antithesis.

The opera opens with a conflict between Cupid and rival gods Virtue and Fortune, and, initially, we are led to believe that the message of the opera is the triumph of love. However, we are soon met with the duplicity of love’s victory. At least four lives are taken during the course of the opera preceding Poppea and Nero’s marriage. Furthermore, seventeenth-century audiences would have known the cruel fate awaiting Poppea just a few years afterward. The confounding message of the opera is mostly the product of the librettist, Giovanni Francesco Busenello, an active member of the prominent Venetian intellectual group, the Academia degli Incogniti. The Incogniti maintained a philosophy of strict skepticism, interrogating the existence of God and Christian morality. Members of the Incogniti chose to live a libertine lifestyle, reveling in earthly pleasures and moral ambivalence. Reading the libretto from their perspective helps us to understand the opera’s unabashed, albeit contradictory, celebration of sensual passion.

One of the core conventions of the Incogniti was a mistrust of appearances, especially beauty, which masks a person’s true inner reality. To quote a member, the Venetian historian Simone Luzzatto, “The human soul is made up of a mosaic, which appears to form a single idea, and on closer inspection, shows itself to be made up of various fragments of small stones . . . ” Busenello employs the mosaic analogy in crafting the characters of Poppea.

One such multifaceted character is Nero’s advisor, Seneca. Although supposedly the voice of virtue, other characters refer to him in negative or mocking terms; the guards describe him as a sly opportunist, and Nero dismisses him as a madman. Even more disparagingly, as an advisor, he is impotent, and his counsel is repeatedly ignored. Monteverdi’s music, however, reveals a certain sympathy for the philosopher. Seneca’s song in Act 2, Scene 1, “L’uscir di vita è una beata sorte,” is saturated with musical pathos. Musicologist Ellen Rosen says this song “shifts into triple meter and a beautifully arched stepwise melodic line of successively smaller curves descends to a cadence, sealing Seneca’s happy acceptance of his fate and emphasizing his union with the gods.” Furthermore, at his death, Seneca’s followers sing a lament so highly imbued with chromaticism, a musical trope traditionally associated with serious expressive intent, it communicates genuine mourning. Despite his reputation, by accepting his death, Seneca finally puts into practice the stoicism he preached. This music’s sincerity reflects an alignment between the philosopher and his philosophy. However, the ensuing trio, derived from an earlier madrigal, has an inappropriate canzonetta-like tone. His followers’ liveliness contradicts Seneca’s sincerity and repudiates his stoic teachings, implying that Seneca’s counsel for virtue over desire has once again gone unheeded.

Early opera was a collaborative genre; evidence suggests that Monteverdi’s contemporaries contributed to the piece, treating it as a living document as opposed to an unchangeable work. To this point, although sources indicate it is not Monteverdi’s own composition, the opera closes with the deliciously sensuous duet between Poppea and Nero, “Pur ti miro, pur ti godo.” The yearning dissonances between the interweaving voices are set over a simple descending bass line, depicting their adoration for and erotic infatuation with one another. The duet encapsulates the essence of the opera: love is an intoxicating and sometimes disturbing force, which, when given power over reason, is capable of subjugating Virtue, Fortune, and in Poppea’s case, all of Rome.

Laughter is infectious. And so, it seems, is Falstaff.

Sir John Falstaff is undoubtedly a grotesque figure. He drinks too much, eats too much, associates with thieves and lowlifes, schemes to seduce married women, and indulges in all manner of vice. His physicality and even bestiality are emphasized at every turn. The very first scene of the opera has him glorying in the fatness of his body, proclaiming that his belly is his kingdom and that he must enlarge it, to which his cronies Bardolph and Pistol exclaim, “Immense Falstaff! Enormous Falstaff!” Verdi’s scoring calls attention to these constant references to thinness and fatness, heaviness and lightness: for example, in the same scene, he worries that he will become thin, and his vocal line is supported thinly with only a piccolo and a cello. The opera’s characterization of him as animalistic continues even to the last scene, where Falstaff admits, after much torment from the other characters, “I begin to perceive that I am an ass,” his vocal line imitating the braying of a donkey.

What is more, for much of the opera, the old knight seems stubbornly unaware that he is not as attractive to others as he is to himself. In Act I, Scene 1, he believes that he can successfully woo both Alice Ford and Meg Page, but any confidence we might have in his plan is immediately dashed in Scene 2, where the women mock Falstaff’s identical love letters to them and pledge to get their revenge. Even Falstaff’s own sidekicks, it appears, are against him, as they enter later in the scene with the rest of the men, all of them hurling insults at the wicked Sir John.

But perhaps they protest too much. Despite everyone’s insistence that Falstaff is unworthy of their love or respect, they are drawn more and more into his orbit as the opera goes on. If Falstaff is a grotesque figure of vice, his characteristics seem to infect everyone around him. He concocts schemes to gain access to Alice’s and Meg’s fortunes, prompting a series of even more elaborate schemes, from the women’s entrapment of Falstaff in Act II to the masked double wedding in Act III. He treats his friends cruelly, but they respond by dumping him in the river in Act II and escalating to blows and insults in Act III. When Quickly flatters Falstaff in Act II, Scene 1, by saying, “You bewitch them all,” we are expected to see the irony in her statement, yet in some sense it is true.

Then what is so bewitching about Falstaff? The answer can perhaps be found in the strange magical play-within-a-play of the third act. If the opera had ended after Act II, the plot could have been a passable domestic opera buffa of the previous century. But this is not just a comedy in the classical sense; it is a comedy steeped in the sensibilities of romanticism. Earlier in the century, dramatist Victor Hugo had argued that the grotesque and the sublime were really two sides of the same coin, both being ways of expressing a sense of something overwhelming and beyond ordinary experience, and that great drama arose from the interplay of both. He noted that Shakespeare’s plays often combined both the beautiful and the ugly, the profound and the comic, in ways that anticipated romanticism.

What Falstaff has to offer, then, is enchantment, a glimpse of something outside the staid world of the everyday. In a wonderful moment at the beginning of Act III, poor Sir John is recovering from his spill into the river Thames and takes a first sip of warmed wine. He describes good wine as a trill that starts in the eyes, rises to the brain, and continues spreading until its madness unsettles the globe and invades the entire world. As he sings, a musical trill begins in the flutes, and then the violins, and one by one, each instrument joins in until the entire orchestra is alive with the trill. Like the trill, Falstaff’s sublime grotesqueness may be madness, but it is nonetheless compelling.

The other characters fully succumb to this mad enchantment in the masquerade of the third act. Nannetta is dressed as the fairy queen, all in white, singing a lyrical melody accompanied by flute flourishes, harp arpeggios, and a female choir—musical signifiers of fairy tales. But these fairies are much more dangerous than they first appear. They quickly take on the musical tropes of the demonic side of the supernatural, including fast chromatic lines, a jangling triangle, and staccato triplet statements of “pizzica” (pinch) as they poke and prod at Falstaff. Yet all’s well that ends well, and despite Falstaff’s repeated humiliations, we cannot help but think that he has come out on top. After all conflicts have been resolved, Falstaff leads the company in a closing fugue, proclaiming, “All the world’s a joke,” in a delightful twist on Shakespeare’s line. Falstaff, like the trill, has invaded the world.

One could say that Falstaff’s tricksterish influence extended even to the creation of the opera itself. The librettist Arrigo Boito schemed to convince the aging Verdi to write an opera derived from Shakespeare’s The Merry Wives of Windsor by appealing to the composer’s love of the English playwright and his as-yet-unfulfilled desire to write a comic opera. Verdi, whose fame in the operatic world was of Falstaffian dimensions, assented, but kept his work on the opera a secret until it could finally be revealed in full. As Verdi’s final work, it seems right that its last line should be, “He who laughs last, laughs best.”

Daniela Siena came to Indiana University Jacobs School of Music Opera Theater in the fall of 2012 after nearly a decade of annual trips to Bloomington to visit family.

She had worked with several Jacobs School of Music faculty members as an Italian diction coach in the 1970s and 80s, and a chance encounter between her son, Matthew, and conductor Arthur Fagen at the Musical Arts Center (MAC) led to her relocation to Bloomington.

From then until shortly before her death in December 2020, Siena coached Jacobs School students in Italian diction and produced the supertitles for more than 30 productions at the MAC.

Born to a Jewish family in Florence, Italy, in 1933, Siena learned to love music from her mother and grandmother, both of whom were opera lovers and accomplished pianists. Her father, who had escaped from the Russian Civil War in 1919 and found refuge in Italy, was an attorney and legal scholar.

In 1938, their lives were upended by Mussolini’s Leggi Razziali, which forced their emigration first to France and then to the United States after the German invasion in 1940. They settled in New York, where Siena attended school and studied Italian and French literature at Sarah Lawrence College.

In 1955, she returned to Italy, where she worked for Adriano Olivetti, the president of the Olivetti typewriter company, and renewed her connection to Italian language and culture. Returning to New York in the late 1950s, she met her future husband, Jerold Siena, an American singer who had studied opera and choral music in Italy.

The couple married in 1962 and together experienced the joys and disappointments of the American opera world in the 1960s and 70s. Son Matthew was born in 1964, and their daughter, Jessica, was born in 1967.

Siena was introduced to operatic diction by Boris Goldovsky, who was seeking a native speaker without teaching experience to work with singers according to his own pedagogical principles. Siena went on to coach Italian diction at the Metropolitan Opera, Curtis Institute of Music, and New York City Opera.

After her divorce from her husband, she joined New York City Opera as the executive assistant to Beverly Sills, continuing to coach Italian diction and creating the English supertitles for a dozen Italian operas in the City Opera repertoire.

During her 50-year career, Siena coached well-known singers such as June Anderson, Wolfgang Brendel, Justino Díaz, Jerry Hadley, Sherrill Milnes, Samuel Ramey, Gianna Rolandi, and Carol Vaness. Among those she worked on opera productions with were Tito Capobianco, John Copley, John Cox, David Effron, Arthur Fagen, Otto Guth, Terry Lusk, Anthony Manoli, Edoardo Müller, Anthony Pappano, Max Rudolf, Andrei Șerban, and Dino Yannopoulos.

In addition to her work with Jacobs School of Music students, she touched developing artists through her work with the Los Angeles Opera Young Artists Program and Dolora Zajick’s Institute for Young Dramatic Voices.

Siena’s move to Bloomington was a wonderful coda to a multifaceted life that not only spanned two continents, but also the east and west coasts of the United States.

In the Midwestern heartland, she was welcomed into the artistic community of the Jacobs School, reunited with old friends, and made new ones as she lived out her final years. Best of all, she was able to share her love of opera with a new generation of young artists and spend more time with family.

Survivors include her children, Matthew of Bloomington, Indiana, and Jessica of Stockton, California; sisters Simona of Brooklyn, New York, and Alexandra of Andes, New York; brother Haim of Pacific Palisades, California; and grandchildren Elisabeth, Nicholas, and Charlotte.

Director’s Notes

by Michael Shell

In preparing to direct this production of Falstaff, two things occupied my mind. The first was the tremendous responsibility of bringing this masterpiece to life. The second, even more significant than the first, was how to responsibly direct two brilliant emerging artists to portray the role of Falstaff, a character constantly shamed and mocked because of his size.

Falstaff is a masterpiece. Verdi and Boito have spun a web of music and words so complex and intertwined that it enhances the Shakespearian source material, The Merry Wives of Windsor and Henry IV. Without the traditionally expected arias, duets, and ensembles acting as standalone sections, the drama continuously unfolds in real time, with only a few moments of pause. The condensed dramatic speed makes the show a joy while simultaneously keeping a director up at night!

As both a director and educator, the challenge was to responsibly contextualize the opera and the way it views the eponymous character. On the surface, we see a man in decline. An aging knight, once revered by many, is now scrounging for money to feed his appetite both corporally and sexually. At the same time, Falstaff is blessed with a never wavering self-conceit.

The opera celebrates all the temporal joys of life. The character Falstaff embodies that celebration in all ways, which is the catalyst for the joy in the opera. Even in his darkest moments of reflection, he never once looks down upon himself. From his mouth, the character states how he has become too fat and is getting old. Yet moments later, he sees his size as his asset for power and seduction. Even in the end, when his plot is revealed, he admits he has made an “ass” of himself but insists that the people in Windsor would be bored and boring if it were not for him. Falstaff is truly one of the most confident and body positive characters ever written.

In all fairness, the opera does not focus solely on Falstaff’s size. The other characters’ judgment of Falstaff is fair due to his attempts to seduce two married women to steal their money. Yet, the thrust of the humor lies in poking fun at both his size and behavior. As a director, I collaborated with our two singers to be on the lookout for any moment where we bordered on just making a mockery of size. We did our best to focus instead on truthful behavior that, given the circumstances, brings about humor.
This masterpiece has many problematic lines in the libretto that relate to a time when marginalization and otherism were even more rampant and unchecked than in our current society. While we have made some adjustments in our supertitles to the racially charged phrases that have no plot or character payoff in the end, we specifically chose not to alter all of the more offensive titles. The story’s humor continues to move forward, but having these lines accurately translated allows us, the audience, to reflect on the times we have judged a book by its cover.

Theater and art, in general, are not meant solely to present a utopia, but to reflect the current times and to, hopefully, shine a light on certain types of behavior or a lack of awareness in society. The playwright Bertolt Brecht composed this line of text in his musical The Threepenny Opera, “Human beings have the horrid capacity to make themselves heartless at will.”

In Falstaff, we, the audience, can reflect on how we have allowed the darkest and basest parts of ourselves to come out. However, the gift of being human is that we can learn from past behavior and grow. Like the social justice heroes of the past, present, and future, Falstaff never once lets the people of Windsor off the hook. He takes the jabs and comments in stride, and, quite frankly, while he does not get the girls or the money in the end, he retains his dignity and rightfully deserves and gains the respect of the community who once judged him.

Synopsis

Act I

Scene 1

Sir John Falstaff, the portly rascal of Windsor, sits in the Garter Inn with his “bad companions” Bardolfo and Pistola. When Dr. Caius enters to accuse the three of abusing his home and robbing him, Falstaff dismisses the charges with mock solemnity. He then upbraids his friends for being unable to pay the bill. Seeking to better his fortunes, Falstaff plans to woo wealthy matrons Alice Ford and Meg Page. He writes love letters to both, but his henchmen decide their ethics forbid them to deliver the notes. Falstaff gives them to a pageboy instead and lectures his cronies on honor as he chases them from the Garter Inn.

Scene 2

Alice and her daughter, Nannetta, are talking with Meg and Dame Quickly. They soon discover that Falstaff has sent identical letters. Outraged, they resolve to punish him, then withdraw as Ford arrives with Caius, Fenton, Bardolfo, and Pistola, all warning him about Falstaff’s designs. Briefly alone, Nannetta and Fenton steal kisses until the women return, plotting to send Quickly to Falstaff to arrange a rendezvous with Alice. Next, Nannetta and Fenton are interrupted by Ford, who also plans to visit Falstaff. As the women reappear, all pledge to take the fat knight down a peg or two.
Act II

Scene 1

At the inn, Falstaff accepts Bardolph and Pistola’s feigned penitence for their mutiny. Soon, Quickly curtsies in to assure the knight that both Alice and Meg return his ardor. Arranging a meeting with Alice, Falstaff rewards Quickly with a pittance and then, alone, preens himself. The next visitor is Ford, disguised as “Master Brook” and pretending an unrequited passion for Alice. Employed to break down the lady’s virtue, Falstaff boasts he already has set up a tryst and steps out to array himself. Ford, unable to believe his ears, vows to avenge his honor. Regaining his composure when Falstaff returns, he leaves arm in arm with the knight.

Scene 2

In Ford’s house, Quickly tells Alice and Meg about her visit with the knight at the inn. Nannetta does not share in the fun; her father has promised her to Caius. The women reassure her before hiding, except for Alice, who sits strumming a lute as her fat suitor arrives. Recalling his salad days as a slender page, he is cut short when Quickly announces Meg’s imminent approach. Falstaff hides behind a screen, and Meg sails in to report that Ford is on his way over in a fury. Quickly confirms this, and while Ford and his men search the house, Falstaff takes refuge amid the dirty linen in a laundry basket. Slipping behind the screen, Nannetta and Fenton attract attention with the sound of their kissing. While Meg and Quickly muffle Falstaff’s cries for air, Ford sneaks up on the screen, knocks it over, and pauses briefly to berate the two lovers as the chase continues upstairs. Alice orders servants to heave the basket into the Thames and then leads her husband to the window to see Falstaff dumped into the muddy river.

Act III

Scene 1

At sunset outside the inn, Falstaff bemoans his misadventure while downing a mug of warm wine. His reflections are halted by Quickly, who insists that Alice still loves him and proves it with a note appointing a midnight rendezvous in Windsor Park. Alice, Ford, Meg, Caius, and Fenton sneak in as Falstaff enters the inn with Quickly, who tells him the gory tale of the Black Huntsman’s ghost, often seen in Windsor Park at midnight. Alice and the others take up the story, plotting to frighten Falstaff by dressing up as wood sprites.

Scene 2

In the moonlit Windsor Forest, Fenton sings of love and receives a monk’s costume for the masquerade; Nannetta is a queen of the fairies; Meg, a nymph; and Quickly, a witch. Everyone takes off as Falstaff lumbers in dressed up as a huntsman and wearing antlers. Scarcely has he greeted Alice when Meg warns of approaching demons. As the knight cowers, Nannetta calls the forest creatures to their revels. They torment Falstaff until he begs for mercy. When the conspirators unmask, Sir John takes it like a sport. Ford betroths Caius to the queen of the fairies (now Bardolph in disguise) and unwittingly blesses Nannetta and Fenton. Ford too has been duped, but he can forgive as well. Falstaff then leads the company in declaring the world is but a jest.

At the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music (CCM), Albanese served as conductor of the Men’s Chorus. Additionally, he served the roles of chorus master and assistant conductor for CCM’s mainstage and undergraduate opera productions, respectively. He has also researched, written, and presented on the topic of compositional technique and its relationship to missionary rhetoric in the Missa ego flos campi of Juan Gutiérrez de Padilla. Albanese earned his B.M. in Music Education and Vocal Performance from the University of Dayton, an M.M. in Vocal Performance from Northwestern University, and a D.M.A. in Choral Conducting from CCM.

George Balanchine (1904-1983), Choreographer, Fall Ballet (“Donizetti Variations”) and Spring Ballet (“Agon Pas de Trois”). Born in St. Petersburg, Russia, George Balanchine is regarded as the foremost contemporary choreographer in the world of ballet. He came to the United States in late 1933, at the age of 29, accepting the invitation of the young American arts patron Lincoln Kirstein (1907-96), whose great passions included the dream of creating a ballet company in America. At Balanchine’s behest, Kirstein was also prepared to support the formation of an American academy of ballet that would eventually rival the long-established schools of Europe. This was the School of American Ballet, founded in 1934, the first product of the Balanchine-Kirstein collaboration. Several ballet companies directed by the two were created and dissolved in the years that followed, while Balanchine found other outlets for his choreography. Eventually, with a performance on October 11, 1948, New York City Ballet was born. Balanchine served as its ballet master and principal choreographer from 1948 until his death in 1983. Balanchine’s more than 400 dance works include Serenade (1934), Concerto Barocco (1941), Le Palais de Cristal, later renamed Symphony in C (1947), Orpheus (1948), The Nutcracker (1954), Agon (1957), Symphony in Three Movements (1972), Stravinsky Violin Concerto (1972), Vienna Waltzes (1977), Ballo della Regina (1978), and Mozartiana (1981). His final ballet, a new version of Stravinsky’s Variations for Orchestra, was created in 1982. He also choreographed for films, operas, revues, and musicals. Among his best-known dances for the stage is “Slaughter on Tenth Avenue,” originally created for Broadway’s On Your Toes (1936). The musical was later made into a movie. A major artistic figure of the twentieth century, Balanchine revolutionized the look of classical ballet. Taking classicism as his base, he heightened, quickened, expanded, streamlined, and even inverted the fundamentals of the 400-year-old language of academic dance. This had an inestimable influence on the growth of dance in America. Although at first his style seemed particularly suited to the energy and speed of American dancers, especially those he trained, his ballets are now performed by all the major classical ballet companies throughout the world.

August Bournonville, Choreographer, Spring Ballet (“Bournonvilles Suite”). August Bournonville, born in Copenhagen in 1805, was a dancer and choreographer who directed the Royal Danish Ballet for nearly 50 years and established the Danish style based on bravura dancing and expressive mime. He studied under his father, Antoine Bournonville, one of the major dancers of his day, before going to Paris for further training under Auguste Vestris and Pierre Gardel. After appearances at the Paris Opera and in London, Bournonville returned to Copenhagen as a soloist and choreographer for the Royal Danish Ballet. A strong dancer with excellent elevation and an accomplished mime, he emphasized these qualities in his ballets. His choreographic style also reflected the pre-Romantic approach of his teacher Vestris. Many of his ballets have remained in the repertoire.
of the Royal Danish Ballet for more than a century. Bournonville also directed the Swedish Royal Opera at Stockholm (1861-64) and staged several of his works in Vienna (1855-56). In 1877, after his return to Denmark, he retired and was knighted. He died on November 30, 1879, in Copenhagen. (Portrait by Louis Aumont, 1828)

Michael Breeden, Stager, Fall Ballet (“In Creases”). Michael Sean Breeden trained at the School of American Ballet, San Francisco Ballet, and Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet before joining Miami City Ballet in 2006. In the 12 years he danced with the company, he performed principal roles in the works of George Balanchine, Jerome Robbins, Justin Peck, Alexei Ratmansky, Twyla Tharp, Paul Taylor, and Liam Scarlett. Breeden also performed with Boston Ballet, Suzanne Farrell Ballet, Oregon Ballet Theatre, and Pennsylvania Ballet. In 2016, he started the podcast Conversations on Dance with cohost Rebecca King Ferraro. The podcast has enjoyed residencies at the Vail Dance Festival, Kennedy Center, and San Francisco Ballet, and now has more than 100 episodes. In 2018, Breeden began to stage the works of Justin Peck at companies around the world.

Multifaceted American jazz pianist and composer Emmet Cohen is one of his generation’s pivotal figures in music and the related arts. DownBeat magazine praised the “nimble touch, measured stride, and warm harmonic vocabulary” he employs to communicate with other musicians and audiences at what he terms “the deepest level of humanity and individuality.” Leader of the Emmet Cohen Trio and creator of the Masters Legacy Series, Cohen is an internationally acclaimed jazz artist and dedicated music educator. He is the winner of the 2019 American Pianists Awards and the Cole Porter Fellow of the American Pianists Association. Marzio Conti, Conductor, Falstaff and The Nutcracker. Music director of the Oviedo Philharmonic (OFIL) from 2011 to 2017, Marzio Conti received recognition and the acclaim of audiences and critics for his achievements in guiding the growth of the orchestra to new artistic heights, notably with OFIL’s recordings of the complete symphonic works of Saint-Saëns for Warner Classics. Conti has earned numerous awards and has been named a juror for the arts prize of the prestigious Premios Asturias. Among his generation’s leading exponents of the flute, Conti performed with major orchestras and made numerous recordings through the mid-1990s, after which he devoted himself to conducting. A student of Piero Bellugi, Conti quickly received engagements as a permanent director of various Italian and foreign orchestras. He conducts both opera and the symphonic repertoire and collaborates with leading international dance companies as well as major soloists. Conti has appeared as a guest conductor throughout Europe at such notable venues as the Rome Opera, Theater Dortmund, and London’s Wigmore Hall. He has conducted numerous orchestras, including Orchestra Haydn, Orquesta de la Comunidad de Madrid, Brandenburger Symphoniker, Korean National Symphony Orchestra, and Haifa Symphony Orchestra (Israel), to name a few. He has collaborated with a host of soloists, including Barbara Hendricks, Bryn Terfel, Misha Maisky, Midori, Lin Harrell, Sabine Meyer, and Jean-Pierre Rampal. Through recordings, broadcast media, and live performance, Conti has worked to develop the profile and quality of several institutions. Before his work with OFIL, he was principal conductor at the Istituzione Sinfonica Abruzzese (1998-2002), music director of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Turin (2001-04), music director of the Teatro di Tradizione per l’Opera Italiana of Chieti (2003-08), and artistic director of the Orchestra Sinfonica di Sanremo (2004-10). When he stepped down as OFIL’s music director, the city of Oviedo awarded Conti the Gold Medal of the Auditorium Prince Felipe in recognition of his extraordinary contributions. Since 2014, he has collaborated as guest conductor and visiting professor with the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music.

Karina Elver, Stager, Spring Ballet (“Bournonvilles Suite”). Karina Elver was born in 1962 in Copenhagen, Denmark. She began to dance at the age of three, and at age nine, was accepted as a ballet student at the Royal Danish Ballet School. In 1978, she was accepted as an apprentice at the Royal Danish Ballet (RDB), and after two years, she became a dancer there. At RDB, she had many solo parts in several ballets by August Bournonville, Balanchine, Alvin Ailey, and many more. In 1992, she started to create her own choreography. In 2003, after a wonderful career of 32 years, she decided to leave the Royal Danish Theatre to work as a freelance ballet teacher/choreographer/repetiteur and Bournonville specialist. Since 2011, Elver has been working in New York and across the United States, teaching and staging Bournonville ballets.

Candace Evans, Stage Director, The Coronation of Poppea. Candace Evans is pleased to return to IU Jacobs School of Music Opera Theater, where her new production of Florencia en el Amazonas went on to San Diego Opera to be acclaimed as “best illustrating the composer’s intent.” Akhnaten, which she also directed at IU Jacobs Opera, was honored to be named “definitive” by the Philip Glass organization. At the legendary Teatro Colón, her La Viuda Alegre was named in the top three operas of the entire Argentinian season. Internationally praised for “a flawless sense of timing” (Opera News), whose work is “genuine gripping drama” (Opera Now), Evans is known for the kind of incisive storytelling she created when she wrote the libretto for Wisdom of Stone, which she also directed, for OperaVision Europe during the pandemic. Her own performance career included international acting tours, dancing with the Wisconsin Ballet Company, singing with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, and national voice-over credits. This combination of talent illustrates why her directorial style includes the integration of musical intent, dramatic truth, and the physical life of performers. Committed to working with young artists at least once annually, she has collaborated with Yale, Carnegie Mellon, Taos Opera Institute, Oberlin, Seagle Festival, La Musica Lirica, and Shenandoah University. Past professional engagements include Dallas Opera, Santa Fe, Arizona, North Carolina, Palm Beach, Madison, and Fort Worth, as well as international tours with the Montefeltro Festival.
